Why an “infermieristica” journal?

As I write the first page of a new scientific journal, my mind goes back to why I am awarded the editor-in-chief. The infermieristica journal is a new journal that originates from the strong will of a group of younger nurses, the ones you taught to, the same nurses from different courses and schools. These are the present nurses and will be the future nurses, with intact enthusiasm, passion, and will to learn more and share the knowledge they bear and burn in a special light. These are the main reasons to drive the adventure of a new journal. Infermieristica journal wants to be supported by a solid and dedicated scientific committee that I want to thank for accepting to run together profoundly.

It is not an easy task to start a new journal; aside from many other excellent journals in the field, we are well aware of that, even more if your ambition is to make it different from the others. We know that in advance.

The infermieristica journal will publish articles on any field and topic of that complex world, nursing; in particular, we will try to attract young authors. The Scientific Board will play an essential role in that, not only by selecting the best articles, but particularly in teaching, through constructive comments, how to write, present and discuss data with first-time authors. We welcome contributions from anyone who has high-level information to submit. In addition to original contributions, infermieristica journal will also publish monographic issues throughout the year, including advancements in techniques, novel evidence-based recommendations, and more general reviews. We trust they might serve the scope to share updated knowledge.

On top of these plans, we welcome any suggestions from the readers. Our aim is that infermieristica journal becomes a live journal for all nurses, easy to read but of high quality, open mind, and scientifically rigorous.

With these premises, I am honoured to be Editor-in-chief of infermieristica journal and since now indebted to the national and international members of the scientific board and to all those who will work for, and contribute to the journal.
